

Keep Greeley Moving

The Greeley area has been one of the fastest-growing communities in the country, and with the added traffic, repair crews need resources now more than ever.

Greeley is already facing a backlog of more than $100 million of repair projects, and the new growth puts increased pressure on our streets and sidewalks.

Renewing the Keep Greeley Moving tax will allow the city to improve the quality of Greeley's worst streets, add capacity to its busiest roads and intersections, and repair sidewalks in neighborhoods across the city.

And it will do that without raising taxes.

Doing basic street maintenance now saves taxpayers money in the long run, catching repairs before they become much more expensive and time consuming.

In this effort, the City of Greeley will continue to maintain its role as a responsible steward of taxpayer dollars. Spending will continue to be independently audited, overseen by a citizens advisory committee, and published on the city's website for all taxpayers to review.
